

KENTUCKY NEWS.

Aut inveniam viam, aut faciam.

VOL. X. NO. 39.

LOUISA, LAWRENCE COUNTY, KENTUCKY, MAY 31, 1895.

M. F. CONLEY, Publisher.

NEWS ITEMS.

The people of the United States consumed 192,000 tons of lead last year. It has been definitely decided to provide New Orleans with a trolley car postal service.

The eighth annual convention of the Kentucky Christian Endeavor union began at Louisville, Ky., last night.

The Star brewery, Nashville, Ill., was destroyed by fire, loss, $75,000, partially insured.

A large consignment of pike perch were taken to Akron, O., by the United States fish car No. 3.

A good well has been drilled in at New Cuyahoga, Ind. This extends the Indiana field to the Ohio line.

Paul Gena, who murdered his sweetheart, Clara Anheim, was sentenced at Jersey City to be hanged July 23.

The Manchester (O.) Fair association offers a prize of $50 to the winner of a game of ball, to be played during fair week.

The Charles A. Wood Co., dealers in builders' supplies, Cleveland, O., assigned assets, $110,000, liabilities, $70,000.

Bernard Helvetzer, a wealthy Louisville wine keeper, was slain by an unknown man in "Jack the Ripper" style.

The Confederate veterans have decided on June 3 to be set as a day for memorial services over the grave of their dead.

Senators Turpin, Voorhees and Gov. Matthews, of Indiana, are planning an attempt to overthrow the appointment act.

Earl B. Smart and Wells K. Stanley won the championship game of tennis in the Ohio Wesleyan university tournament Wednesday.

Ex-Gov. W. H. Board was elected department commander of the Wisconsin Grand Army of the Republic for the ensuing year.

Charles S. Collins, the leading silver advocate in Little Rock, Ark., has been appointed editor of the Chicago Daily Tribune, commencing June 1.

The county commissioners Friday ordered plans for a $300,000 courthouse at South Bend, Ind., to take the place of the present antiquated structure.

Gov. McKinley is on the programme for an address at Gen. Grant's tomb in New York Memorial day. Ex-President Harrison will also be a speaker.

The eight saddle hardware manufacturers of the United States met at Pittsburgh Thursday to form a combination to decrease expenses and put up prices.

Cleveland (O.) horses have the distemper, and the disease puzzles the veterinary men. It has run through the police and fire departments, and hardly a horse has escaped.

Gordon Conkling, proprietor of the Grass Lands stock farm, in New York, and an extensive breeder of trotting stock, has made a general assignment. Assets and liabilities unknown.

At Smith's Mills, Ky., the storehouse of J. W. Haynes was burglarized. The safe was blown open with dynamite and robbed of $300 and some checks, while the goods were untouched.

It is announced that the civil service commission that an examination for storekeepers and gangers for the West Virginia internal revenue district will be held at Parkersburg, the latter part of June.

Early Friday morning burglars entered the residence of Dr. J. W. Haynes, Episcopal church, Wheeling, W. Va., and carried off of $500 worth of jewelry from the jewel case of Mrs. Swope, the wife of the reverend.

The Erieport team club won the inter-collegiate shoot Friday by defeating Harvard by a score of 30 to 25.

Episcopal church, Wheeling, W. Va., and carried off of $500 worth of jewelry from the jewel case of Mrs. Swope, the wife of the reverend.

The Erieport team club won the inter-collegiate shoot Friday by defeating Harvard by a score of 30 to 25.

Episcopal church, Wheeling, W. Va., and carried off of $500 worth of jewelry from the jewel case of Mrs. Swope, the wife of the reverend.

PASSES AWAY.

Secretary Gresham Dies Unexpectedly of Acute Pleurisy.

His End Was Peaceful and Painless. Conscious Until the Last.

The President, Cabinet Officers, Diplomats and Other Distinguished Officials Pay Their Respects—His Distinguished and Honorable Career.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—Secretary Gresham died at 11:15 o'clock. No death could be more quiet, more calm or more peaceful.

For two hours preceding dissolution there had been no indication either of a pulse or heart beat. He lay during that time with his head resting on the arms of his daughter, Mrs. Andrews, while his devoted wife sat by his side, his hands clasped in hers, his face so turned that his last conscious gaze should rest upon her. And so the minutes dragged slowly on until the end came. He was conscious to the last.

Walter Quintin Gresham was one of the few remaining log-cabin statesmen. He was born March 17, 1833, in an old-fashioned farm house near Lanesville, Harrison county, Ind. His father, Wm. Gresham, was sheriff of the backwoods county, and was shot to death while attempting to arrest an outlaw. Walter Gresham was at that time two years old, and next to his grandfather, George Gresham, had been one of the pioneer settlers of the state.

Walter Gresham's opportunities for schooling were limited. In his boyhood days he followed the plow by day and studied his books at night. He attended Corydon seminary two years, and was admitted to the bar when he was 22 years old, and began to practice law.

Gresham was a whig in politics. He was nominated for the legislature in 1856 as a republican, and was elected in a strongly democratic district. When the war broke out Gresham enlisted as a private in the Thirty-eighth Indiana regiment. Almost immediately he was selected as the lieutenant colonel of that regiment.

He saw his first service at Shiloh, and later he took part in the siege of Corinth. Col. Gresham met Grant at Vicksburg, and after the surrender Grant and Sherman united in recommending him for a brigadier general's commission, which he received.

While in command of a division of Sherman's army at Leggett's Hill, before Atlanta, Gen. Gresham was shot in the knee, a wound from which he never fully recovered. The wound, however, was not a serious one, and he was able to resume his duties.

Gen. Gresham accepted President Grant's appointment as United States district judge for Indiana in 1869, and during the twelve years that he held that district judgeship not one of his decisions was reversed. President Arthur called him from the bench to become a member of his cabinet in 1883, and since that time Mr. Gresham has been a conspicuous figure in national politics.

Not the close of Arthur's term, on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

was called in and it was he who performed the operation of injecting the normal saline.

In conversation with a reporter a few minutes past 10 o'clock last night Dr. Prentiss said that his patient might live through the night possibly, and possibly until Tuesday forenoon, but he believed that the utmost limit of time that he could last. He added that there was one chance in a thousand that the secretary might rally at the last moment, as Representative Hitt had done, and ultimately recover.

Walter Quintin Gresham was one of the few remaining log-cabin statesmen. He was born March 17, 1833, in an old-fashioned farm house near Lanesville, Harrison county, Ind. His father, Wm. Gresham, was sheriff of the backwoods county, and was shot to death while attempting to arrest an outlaw. Walter Gresham was at that time two years old, and next to his grandfather, George Gresham, had been one of the pioneer settlers of the state.

Walter Gresham's opportunities for schooling were limited. In his boyhood days he followed the plow by day and studied his books at night. He attended Corydon seminary two years, and was admitted to the bar when he was 22 years old, and began to practice law.

Gresham was a whig in politics. He was nominated for the legislature in 1856 as a republican, and was elected in a strongly democratic district. When the war broke out Gresham enlisted as a private in the Thirty-eighth Indiana regiment. Almost immediately he was selected as the lieutenant colonel of that regiment.

He saw his first service at Shiloh, and later he took part in the siege of Corinth. Col. Gresham met Grant at Vicksburg, and after the surrender Grant and Sherman united in recommending him for a brigadier general's commission, which he received.

While in command of a division of Sherman's army at Leggett's Hill, before Atlanta, Gen. Gresham was shot in the knee, a wound from which he never fully recovered. The wound, however, was not a serious one, and he was able to resume his duties.

Gen. Gresham accepted President Grant's appointment as United States district judge for Indiana in 1869, and during the twelve years that he held that district judgeship not one of his decisions was reversed. President Arthur called him from the bench to become a member of his cabinet in 1883, and since that time Mr. Gresham has been a conspicuous figure in national politics.

Not the close of Arthur's term, on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

The utterly unexpected anti-climax on the death of Secretary Folger, Mr. Gresham was appointed secretary of the treasury. Mr. Gresham, however, longed for a return to the bench, and in the closing days of the Arthur administration he was appointed circuit judge, to succeed Judge Freeman of the Seventh judicial district.

In an interlude in the convention at Chicago, which subsequently nominated Benjamin Harrison, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was called to the platform for a patriotic speech, and after thirty minutes of eloquence, suddenly springing the name of W. Q. Gresham as presidential nominee, and attempted to stampede the convention to his support.

GUILTY.

That is the Verdict the Oscar Wilde Jury Rendered.

The Jury Made Quick Work of the Case—Lord Alfred Douglas Will Probably Be Arrested and Held for Trial On the Same Charge.

LONDON, May 27.—The jury Saturday morning found Oscar Wilde guilty and he was sentenced to two years at hard labor. When the trial was resumed in the old Bailey court Saturday morning, Sir Frank Lockwood continued his address to the jury for the prosecution.

Sir Frank Lockwood expressed hope that the jury would not regard Wilde's letters as "innuendoes," but would appreciate them at their proper level.

Sir Edward Clarke angrily objected to the language used by the prosecuting counsel, and a heated argument between the two ensued. After a protracted wrangle the judge intervened.

Mr. Lockwood finished his address by saying that Wilde's own admissions pointed conclusively to his guilt.

The judge, in summing up, said Wilde had confessed that his conduct in regard to Lord Alfred Douglas had been such that he (the judge) could not ask the jury in the previous trial to say that there was no ground for charging him with having posed as a criminal.

The judge, in the course of his charge to the jury, dealt with each of the charges contained in the indictment, his opinion being plainly and strongly against the prisoner. In regard to Wilde's letters to Lord Alfred Douglas he said they might be "poetic poems," but they were none the less poison to a young man's mind, and the writer was clearly not a desirable companion for the young.

LONDON, May 25.—Before the jury retired the foreman asked the court if a warrant had been issued for the arrest of Lord Alfred Douglas.